Since the flawed presidential elections in Honduras on November 26th, religious leaders and social movements have been pouring into the streets in non-violent protests. The Honduran government has responded with deploying military tanks in the streets, and security forces have killed over 30 people and wounded many hundreds more.

Please join us to hear Honduran Sister Rosa Maria Trochez share about the need for peace and justice in her country. She will testify about the human rights crisis in Honduras, how she and other religious are accompanying the people, and the need for solidarity from the U.S. faith community.
